An empowerment session called "Web 2.0" promises to look into Web 2.0 possibilities in relation to librarianship. Of course best practices, opportunities and limitations are a good part of this session, as well as a look at the existing tools involving EAHIL.
But should we use this term Web 2.0 any longer? The students and the younger staff members are brought up with Web Technologies. They don't see Web 2.0 as a separate phenomenon, but as integrated features. They use them, just because they are there. What role can / should the library play inside an organisation regarding availability of and access to web technologies?
The session will be finished off with a glance at emerging technologies and the possible relevance for libraries.
As Web 2.0 revolves all around communication, sharing and interaction your input in this session is needed to discuss and exchange experiences within our EAHIL community.
